

YOUNGER MEMBERS OF CABINET FAVOR STRONGER POLICY THAN THAT ADVOCATED BY CHAMBERLAIN

Express Themselves Unprepared to Subside to Current Official Viewpoint That Bad Compromise Would Be Better Than A War — Cabinet Resumes Session.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—The cabinet of Prime Minister Chamberlain resumed its emergency session at 10 a. m., eastern daylight time, after a luncheon recess.

By Kingsbury Smith
LONDON, Sept. 17.—Unexpected opposition from the younger members of his cabinet was encountered by Prime Minister Chamberlain today, when he reviewed his momentous conference with Hitler.

Reporting on Hitler's demand for a satisfactory settlement of the Sudeten crisis by October 1st, Chamberlain found some of his younger colleagues advocating a much stiffer attitude than he himself favored.

They expressed themselves unprepared to subside to the current official viewpoint that a bad compromise would be better than war.

Despite the opposition, the cabinet as a whole recessed with a feeling of "cautious optimism."

It was understood the Prime Minister had invited Premier Daladier and Foreign Minister Bonnet of France at the earliest moment.

LONDON, Sept. 17.—(INS)—Faced with a grave decision for peace or war, Britain's cabinet met in an extraordinary session today to consider the "ultimatum" presented to Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain by Chancellor Hitler on the Nazi-Czech crisis.

Home from his hurried visit with the German Fuehrer, Chamberlain was expected to give his colleagues a complete picture of the historic Berchtesgaden conference and to convey the suggestions made by King George VI, with whom the Prime Minister was closeted four hours last night.

It was announced as the cabinet met that the King will remain in the southern part of England over the week-end to keep in close touch with his ministers.

As the ministers gathered at Chamberlain's Downing Street residence, they were watched by a large, solemn crowd of Londoners who were kept at the Whitehall end of the street.

Prior to the cabinet meeting, Foreign Secretary Viscount Halifax had a long private conference with Chamberlain. It was understood they reviewed lengthy dispatches on the situation from the British Ambassadors in Washington, Paris and Rome.

Shortly after the meeting began, Lord Runciman, British mediator in the Nazi-Czech dispute, joined the ministers at the meeting.

On today's meeting, it was believed, hangs the decision of the British government on whether it will pay the price—German annexation of the purely German Sudeten regions of Czechoslovakia—that Hitler demands for peace.

In his conversation with the King, Chamberlain revealed that Hitler had insisted settlement of the Czech-Sudeten dispute could brook no delay.

PRAGUE, Sept. 17.—(INS)—Ernst Kundt, one of the chief lieutenants of Konrad Henlein, Sudeten Deutsche party leader, issued a proclamation today appealing to Sudeten Germans to await the outcome of the "fateful conversations" between Chancellor Hitler and Prime Minister Neville Chamberlain on the explosive Czech crisis.

"Don't allow yourselves to be led astray by suspension of the Sudeten party," the proclamation said. "Whether or parties are to remain in Czechoslovakia is no longer the decisive issue. What is decisive is the fate of Germanism and our homeland. Until a decision is taken, remain fair. Let your nerves be as steel. God is with us!"

Meanwhile, as defiant as if she were a major military power, Czechoslovakia

JAMES PLEDGED TO REDUCE TAX LOAD IF HE IS ELECTED GOVERNOR OF PENNA.

WELLSBORO, Sept. 17.—Pledging himself to restore individual initiative in Pennsylvania by easing the tax burden on industry, thereby providing employment to the State's idle, Superior Court Judge Arthur H. James, Republican nominee for Governor, last night addressed a largely attended meeting here.

As he extended his campaign into northeastern Pennsylvania, the jurist told several thousand Tioga county Republicans that he would restore the "house of industrial blocks knocked down by the burdensome taxation policies of the Earle Administration."

"I'll remove the bloodhounds which have been sniping at industry," he said, "and once more this State will witness the smoke belching from the factories and hear the whistles calling the men back to work in the mines."

Judge James pictured the Republican Party of Pennsylvania as a "party of peace, at every turn of the road fighting dictatorship," and referred to the war-threatened European situation as "one of the prices people pay for dictatorship."

Judge James came here last night after taking his drive into Cameron

Czechs Turn To America

By Pierre J. Huss
(Copyright, 1938)

Berlin, Sept. 17.—Facing decision by France and Great Britain, Czechoslovakia today turned to the United States, the land in which the European Republic was conceived, for aid in her hour of need.

The Czechs, through one of their consular representatives, informally sounded out a member of the American government service in Germany, as to whether the United States was prepared, in case of emergency, to take over Czech affairs in the Reich.

The inquirer, it was learned, was told such matters could be addressed only to Washington, whose authorities alone were competent to deal with the request. It was not known here whether the question was thereupon referred to the American capital.

Meanwhile, Chancellor Hitler waited for the return of Prime Minister Chamberlain of England.

The Czech-German situation grew still more serious today, when the Czech charge d'affaires objected to the foreign office against "numerous groundless" arrests of Czechoslovakian citizens in Germany. The number was estimated at 29, including 16 in Berlin.

Girl, 14, Weds Man, 29

West Chester, Pa., Sept. 17.—Love, as usual, found a way, and so today 14-year-old Alice Jenkins, and her parents' farmland, Henry Johnson, 29 year old, were honeymooning today, despite a boycott of their marriage plans by ministers. Turned away by the pastor of the child bride's church, who refused to perform the ceremony because of Alice's age, the couple went "shopping around" last night until they found a justice of the peace with no such scruples.

FIND CHILD ABANDONED ALONGSIDE EDGELY HOUSE

PARENTS NOT LOCATED

An eight-state broadcast has been sent out for the apprehension of the parents of a six-months-old male child left at an Edgely home sometime during the night. The parents of the child are known and police of other communities have been asked to apprehend them if found. The broadcast was sent out this morning by Bucks County Detective Anthony Russo and the district attorney's office was notified.

The child was found wrapped in a blanket lying in a coach beside the house occupied by Miss Sally Adams, 7 Edgely avenue, Edgely. It was discovered at about 7.30 o'clock. The infant was cold and hungry and the blanket had become damp due to the moisture of the night and early morning. The coach was close alongside of the house.

The child was identified as belonging to Mr. and Mrs. Charles Dale, who are reported to have been living in the vicinity of Tullytown. Mrs. Dale, according to Detective Russo had visited Miss Adams on numerous occasions and been given food and other assistance. She had frequently asked Miss Adams and others residing in the household if they would take her offspring, as she could not take the proper care of it. She recently wrote Miss Adams a letter in which she again made an appeal for her to take the child.

Attached to the blanket was a note addressed to Mrs. William Grace. It read:

"Mrs. Grace will you please take care of my baby as I have no way to take care of him and please don't send him away."

The note was signed "Sally Dale." After the finding of the child Detective Russo endeavored to locate the parents but found that they had left sometime during the early morning for an undisclosed destination. The child is reported as being very attractive.

CONSTITUTION DAY

It was 151 years ago that the Founding Fathers signed the Constitution in Philadelphia. With allowance for the interval of the Civil War, due to the fact that "we the people of the United States" did not include Negroes, who were chattels then and for a subsequent seventy-odd years, it has for a longer time and to a greater degree than any other charter save that the barons wrung from King John, met the chief aims of its signatories. These were "to form a more perfect union, establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity."

Being an American is, therefore, to have a real heritage. But that heritage is a living thing and "the general welfare and the blessings of liberty" do not necessarily mean identical things through passing generations.

Happily the founders did not conceive as irrevocable the tenets of this organic law by which, without authority of the Legislatures of their respective states—after all they had assembled only to amend the Articles of Confederation—they had the daring to found a nation. It had within itself the means of its own change, a thing to be effected, however, only by mature deliberation and a heavily preponderant desire of the Congress and the states. Twenty-one times it has been amended and the Twenty-first Amendment repealed the Eighteenth after a lapse of almost fourteen years.

A good many of our concepts of government have thus undergone change, but it has been an ordered and considered change. The Constitution doubtless will be changed again within the lifetime of many now living. Other days, other manners. But while it is difficult for the rationally minded to subscribe to the theory that any parts of the Constitution, unless it be the preamble, the power to amend and the balance of executive, legislative and judicial branches, can be considered inspired, nevertheless there is about this, our organic law, a positive genius. Those who read with some frequency this historic document cannot rid themselves of that conviction. Much that is noble, much that is bosh, has been written about it. But there it stands, firm, safe, comforting to those who value their citizenship. Its perusal, say once a year, in the unemployed part of some quiet evening or Sunday afternoon, reveals to the layman something ever new, something always invigorating. Why not try it?

WHAT THE PRESS SAYS

But it begins to look as though a certain smiling gentleman who lives not more than half a mile from the Washington monument and thinks he is the only man in God's lovely world who can dramatize the cause of American righteousness, may change his mind. If they tell him the truth his advisers will let him know that Kansas is beginning to relax and enjoy the good old feeling of being Republican, just common or cooking Republican without any trimmings. They are so Republican in their new spiritual exaltation that they feel kind of independent and cagey in their return to the old faith. In their strut and stride they are falling in with the rather independent attitude of Clyde Reed. They aren't going to be bossed around by the President. They aren't going to vote for a rubber stamp and they want to vote for a man who has his own vision of progress, rather definitely separated from totalitarian nightmare of the New Deal.

—Emporia Gazette.

Ohio took care of the poor, but Ohio never encouraged the idle nor those on relief to look to the state for support as a right. That is what the Roosevelt outfit is now doing to a third of the population. The New Deal is seeking votes for bread as the price of living. It is proclaiming itself a holy cause, a crusade of new and liberal thought, when everything it has sought to do of any real value has been outlined in Ohio years ago. The New Deal is a back number.

—Jefferson Gazette, Jefferson, O.

Is all this mere theorizing? Certainly not. It flows naturally from our case-history actually before us. No other President has changed his mind so often as the Hon. Mr. Roosevelt, or more radically. He has been for economy and he has been for waste. He has hollered for fewer jobholders and he has doubled, tripled and quadrupled their number. He has sworn solemnly to safeguard the dollar and he has converted it into baloney. He has crooned for peace and he has fomented war. His principles are as fluid as the assets of a mean banker, and his promise is worth precisely nothing.

—Baltimore Sun (H. L. Mencken.)

Mr. Mark Sullivan called attention yesterday to the fact that the prices of many farm commodities today are lower than they were when President Roosevelt made his famous statement about raising farm prices, on October 23, 1933 ("Do it we will!"). Wheat was quoted on October 23, 1933, at 84 cents. Yesterday it was quoted at 65½. Oats were 34½ cents then; 24½ yesterday. Rye stood at 56½ then; 42 yesterday. To offset this, hogs and cattle today are twice what they were in October, 1933. Butter and eggs, however, are about the same. Cotton in October, 1933, stood at 9.16 cents a pound; today it is 8.25.

That this implies a failure of the price-raising campaign seems beyond question.

—New York Herald-Tribune, 8-24-38.

The condition of our farm markets today is not such as to place the stamp of success upon the past five years of governmental crop control. Wheat is down to 65 cents a bushel on the St. Louis market, the lowest in five years. Cotton is slightly above 8 cents a pound, also a five-year low. Corn, the nation's most valuable crop, is at 53 cents, the lowest since 1934. Measured in purchasing power of the dollar, prices for these three chief farm commodities are scarcely more than the average for 1931-33.

—St. Louis Post Dispatch, 8-22-38.

A story has drifted down from Hyde Park to the effect that when Mr. Roosevelt undertook his lecture to newspaper correspondents Tuesday on "political morality," rude laughter was heard from the back of the room. This ought not to surprise anybody, least of all a hardened campaigner like the President. In fact, some laughing at him would be very salutary just now, for his attack on the Republicans for interfering with Democratic primaries is nothing less than ridiculous.

—Washington Herald.

REPUBLICAN CAMPAIGN SONG

Pennsylvania Republicans have a new official campaign song. The song, officially adopted by the Republican State Committee, is entitled "The True American Way." It was heard, played and sung for the first time at the formal opening of the Republican campaign to elect the Davis-James ticket in Pittsburgh.

Words and music are by D. Lee Chesnut, of Ardmore, Pa.

The verses and chorus of the song follow:

1—The "Little New Deal" has gone off on a spree,
They've promised some gold bricks to you and to me;
Like magic they've pulled a few tricks from the hat,
But now we wake up with our pocket-book flat.
So now they would give us a shot in the arm,
They say it's the "Earle Deal" and can do no harm;
But James pulls the mask from the Harrisburg play,
Let's shout! Hip-hip! Hoo-ray!

Chorus—James will bring a happier day—
In "The True American Way,"
He'll save our farms and our industry—
From want and strife set our labor free;
Work will come when James has won—
Honest pay for everyone—
When our taxes come down,
Then we'll all go to town in "The True American Way."

2—They "borrow from Peter," they hope to "pay Paul."
They don't know the answers—they stumble and fall;
They've spent all our money, they've gone into debt,
They say "Don't you worry—there's no need to fret."
The "Little New Deal," sure they know all the ropes,
They'll borrow more money and still live in hopes
That more and more taxes our people will pay,
For that's the "Earle Deal" way.—Chorus—

3—Our old Keystone State is the best in the land,
The finest resources, our people are grand;
Tomorrow is bright if we work hand in hand,
Let's all pull together, united we stand,
Now James is our leader and Davis his mate,
With Lewis and Livengood—say what a slate!
So here's to the health of our grand Commonwealth;
Three cheers! We'll lead the way.—Chorus—

The tragedy lies in the fact that Mr. Roosevelt's statements, no matter how inaccurate, are accepted unquestioningly by the great mass of voters, who have neither the time nor the inclination to check up on him.

—New York Herald Tribune.

A reader accuses us of immoderate language in criticizing the New Deal. In extenuation we plead that our moderate dictionary is used up. Furthermore we insist that everything we have so far said has been thoroughly justified, and that we only wish our command of language was adequate to the situation. Years ago we acted as nursemaid to a couple of dozen ornery mules in pack-train service among the precipitous mountains of British Columbia, and believed we then cultivated a fair amount of emphatic expletives. But mules as inciters were as nothing to this new threat to horse sense.

We arraign the New Deal and its sponsors for the following reasons, among many others, and raise our voice in the hope that Canada will escape its pitfalls. It has been the most colossal spendthrift in history, and without results; it has welshed upon its platform promises of retrenchment; it is squandering the money of the people in partisan propaganda; it has elevated many a political accident to high office, including the Supreme Court; it has badgered and impeded business, big and small; it has held up to public ridicule and hate the producers of material wealth for party purposes; it has built up power by exploitation of the misery of thirteen millions of unemployed, and has accomplished nothing for the latter after five years of glib promise and expenditure of $20 billion; it has sapped the morale of the people by inculcating the idea that the Government owes every one a living; it has adopted the policy of scarcity, paying farmers for that which they did not raise, and at the same time spent billions to increase productivity of the soil; it has murdered hundreds of thousands of pigs while human millions cried for sustenance; it has encouraged class hatred by abuse from high place, it has set capital against labor against capital; it has tacitly sanctioned mob expropriation of property, and it has abridged personal freedom guaranteed by the Constitution.

We are tired to death of pink communism and sick at heart that a great nation, leading the world in initiative and individualism, should have been brought perilously close to its knees by a Pied Piper of the air, fatuously fluting in ragtime. Its whole mistaken popularity has been based upon the sob appeal that a third of the nation is ill-fed, ill-clothed and ill-housed and the collateral idea that the national sock is everlastingly stuffed full. No decent man, here or elsewhere, begrudges one penny laid out for the aid and sustenance of those really in want, but the New Deal has squandered billions in deliberate, drunken-sailor prodigality and concealment of facts and intent.

We repeat the "immoderate language" that called forth the objection of our reader. We believe the richest country the world has known is headed for New Deal catastrophe if a halt be not called at once; that its people, and there are none finer, are being brought down to shameful misery by the most colossal stupidity that political insanity has yet devised for its own self-perpetuating ends. And we don't expect even Alberta.

CHAPTER XVI

"You'll hang yourself with stories like that," Emilie's voice was glacial. "If you'll let me finish you'll quit trying to think I'm a murderer. I went back to the Sunset after I left you here early this morning. I have a key to the back door so I can get in late when there's a poker game. Toby locks the front when the bridge players leave." Ben went on. "You knew Fowler was dead?"

"I knew something screwy was going on. Fowler didn't leave the club after you rowed with him at the table."

"We heard his car."

"We didn't. That's what tipped me off. Fowler has a roadster a block long. That was a small car we heard leave the Sunset. I'd heard rumors around town about a slick bird with the cards who was due for a fall. Several of the boys thought it was Fowler—but it wasn't. Fowler was a straight player. When I found him stashed this morning I thought he'd been rubbed out by mistake. I was mad when I left and phoned the police."

"And now?"

"Now I know who killed him. I saw the guy on his hands and knees crawling on the side porch by the bridge room. I saw the same guy knock off Rice on the boat tonight. After we left the Four Leaf Clover I trailed him—"

"The dicks have a word for it—blackmail, and accessory after the fact. You'll like playing daisy chain in a Florida road camp."

"Call it what you want. He's going to pay plenty. There's important stakes to warrant two snuff-outs in twenty-four hours." Ben lowered his voice. "Why this mug's a sap. I trailed him to the Sunset just before I came here. He's got something hidden there—and I know where it is. He took part of it home with him tonight. I'm through with this lousy racket—broke one day and winner the next. Let somebody else take the risk on this deal. We'll cut in on the profit."

"Once I thought I loved you, Ben," Emilie said dreamily. He had a queer feeling that the words were dragged from her by some force beyond her control. "You were a good gambler, and knew your stuff. That was before you started playing another man's game, and betting into one-card draws. If you dropped this foolishness I might learn to care for you again."

"Meaning you're not in with me now," Eckhardt carefully measured each word.

"Saying more than that, Ben. You're not going to have anything to do with this—whether you like it or not. I stuck with Zorrie until I heard he was a killer—but I'm not going to let you start on the same road he went. I'll keep my mouth shut so long as you do the same. If you contact this double killer—I'll contact the police. You can gun for me if you want to—and we'll meet in the morgue when Caprilli's torpedoes are through burning your feet. Now get out! You can come back when you see things my way!"

He pulled himself to his feet, looming menacingly by the side of the bed. "You're a double-crosser, Emilie," he stated flatly. "And you'll hear from me on this deal. You've got me now—but Caprilli won't always be so handy." He started through the door into the other room, and turned. "You might remember that Caprilli's torpedoes like to have good clean fun with the ladies, too."

She remained taut and motionless as her footstep crossed the living-room, negotiated the short passage to the back stairs, and cautiously descended. A cramp struck sharply at her left foot. She winced, but did not change her position. Infinitely careful, she was sliding the automatic from under the pillow. Finally it lay just under the sheet, close to her face.

Her breathing grew more regular. Her blue eyes closed, and she stirred uneasily, then lay quiet again. For forty minutes, dragging heavy-laden toward the dawn, the palm tree scraped against the screen, and Emilie did not stir. Then the soft click of the latch on the back door reached her ears.

She lay quiet for ten minutes longer, before she jumped from the bed, and ran barefoot down the stairs to shoot the bolt on the back door. Back in bed, she shoved the pistol under the pillow, and took a long grateful breath.

"What an awful fool!" she whispered to the shadows on the wall. "He sits here spilling the news about what he's going to do—and can't even hear the man who followed him in standing in the other room!"

"Can you eat?"

Stan shifted himself uneasily in bed and tried to blink away a vision of Doris Buchanan placing a breakfast tray on a chair beside him. His head felt unaccountably light in spite of the additional weight of a turban-like bandage. He touched the swathed linen with an explorative finger, winced at the contact, and attempted a cheerful grin which turned out to be sickly.

"Breakfast?"

"You can eat it that," Doris helped him sit up, and arranged a pillow at his back. "It's two o'clock. The day is Monday, and you have five stitches in your head. You owe Dr. Carter five dollars, too. He sewed you up last night with a grapevine stitch, and came in again this morning. He says you'll live—if I can get you to take some nourishment—light broths—"

"Ugh!" Stan shuddered and turned his head away.

Doris placed the tray on his lap. "I brought you food grapefruit, some creamed chicken, toast and marmalade and coffee—"

"I can't understand doctors," said Stan, as he attacked the grapefruit. "Why do they sew up a man's head when he's starving to death? I'll be ready to get up after this."

"That's what you think. Last night you were dead on two counts and now you're going to get up. In case you don't know it—somebody hit you on the head—and you'd have drowned in Biscayne Bay if Commander Dawson hadn't fished you out—"

"Sit down and tell me about it. I'm beginning to remember up to where the film broke. I was talking to Eve Farraday. Who hit me?"

"Several people want to find out—including the Captain. He's downstairs now. I won't let him come up until you've eaten. He's been haunting the house like a grim specter all morning." Doris removed the depleted grapefruit.

"Maybe it was the girl."

"Not Eve Farraday," Stan went after her creamed chicken. "She's adorable—"

"All girls are adorable to you. The Farradays must be just sweet home folks. I'm sure you enjoyed your little visit with them."

Stan grimaced at her from under the bandage. "Don't be catty, Doris—and send up LeRoy. His airtight explanation of this will soothe me—"

"You can have him when you're finished—if you won't talk too long. Honestly, Stan, you were in bad shape last night. Donald and I—"

"I was careless," he said grimly. "I wouldn't worry you and Doris for anything—but I guess I had this coming. The game is getting rough. You say the Farradays brought me home?"

"In a speedboat. They landed you right in front of the house. Commander Dawson was on the deck below when you tumbled overboard. He dove for you as soon as you hit the water. He and one of the men in the speedboat got most of the water out of you on the way here—evidently Navy training is good for something—"

"Where's my white suit?" Stan interrupted.

"I sent it to the cleaners."

"Oh Lord!" He sat up too suddenly and went back on the pillows.

"I had a letter in the pocket."

"The Captain has it. He went through the suit this morning."

"I might have known it. Send him up, will you, Doris. I feel better, really."

Doris removed the tray with a satisfied smile. A termite army could not have more completely demolished the food. All indications were that Miles Standish Rice—The Hungry—was for the moment out of danger. She blew a kiss from the doorway, and cautioned him again about talking too long with LeRoy.

The Captain gripped Stan's hand for several seconds before he spoke. Then he said: "I'll get somebody for this, Stan, if I have to burn the Four Leaf Clover down to the water line—and everybody on board!"

"I'm afraid that wouldn't get the right one, Vince." He reached for a cigarette from the table beside the bed. The Captain found one and lit it for him. "Doris says you got the letter from my coat pocket—"

"Warning Caprilli to stay away from the Sunset?"

Stan nodded. "I wish I knew who wrote it."

"I know who wrote it," LeRoy seemed pleased. "Patterson checked it this morning against Munroe's portable. It came from that machine, Stan."

"It's almost a public machine—where it's located. Caprilli thought Munroe wrote it, too—"

"So you saw that louse?"

"That's why I went to the Four Leaf Clover. I got the letter from Caprilli."

"I'll remember that," LeRoy said sternly. "In case he comes back again."

"He left last night?"

"Early this morning. Listen Stan," the Captain leaned close to the bed, "you must have some idea why you were knocked off that boat last night. What did you find out?"

"I wonder," Stan thoughtfully touched his bandaged head. "For a starter, Vince—Edward Fowler was in love with Eve Farraday. The check of Tolliver's was torn up because Eve asked Fowler to destroy it—"

"Now there's love!" LeRoy had taken a cigar from his pocket and was examining intently a minute flaw on one end. "What a guy! He tears up ten thousand dollar checks for debutantes—and has a dame like Millie LaFrance on the side—"

"They're different types," Stan reminded him drily.

"So?" The Captain lit his cigar.

"And if Fowler did all this—he's a different type from any of the gamblers I've met around joints in this town."

"Maybe it's your turn to come clean, Vince. What are you driving at?"

"I'll tell you," LeRoy said after a short pause.

ON SCREENS IN BRISTOL

The immunity of racketeer barons from punishment, and the helplessness of the police in dealing with them by legal methods, forms the background of RKO Radio's dramatic thriller, "The Saint in New York," at the Grand Theatre, today.

By bribery, intimidation and the tactics of their lawyers, the racketeers laugh at the law. But in the picture this laughter changes to terror when a civic leader, wearied of the situation, secretly calls "The Saint" to mend matters.

This elusive adventurer, who has dedicated his life to fighting crime by his own lawless but efficient methods, sets about wiping out the city's six most prominent gangsters, one by one. Battling the frightened crooks on the one hand and the police, who are not aware of his sponsorship, on the other, he soon finds himself in difficulties.

The results make "The Saint in New York" a brand new type of crime-adventure melodrama. Louis Hayward has the role of "The Saint," with Kay Sutton as the girl, and a cast of noted character players that includes Sig Ruman, Paul Guilfoyle, Jonathan Hale, Frederic Burton, Ben Welden and Cliff Bragdon. Ben Holmes directed, the production by William Siroton.

How a courageous government agent saves the son and daughter of a United States Senator from being involved in a nefarious scheme to smuggle arms and munitions to a foreign nation, is dramatically depicted in the RKO Radio drama, "Border G-Man," starring George O'Brien at the Grand Theatre Sunday.

The story revolves around the activities of a large smuggling ring violating the neutrality laws by secretly exporting men, horses and arms to a warring country from a point on the gulf coast of Texas.

The property on which they operate is owned by a Senator in Washington, and the leader of the gang, John Miljan, inveigles the senator's son into sanctioning the use of the property in return for an interest in a fake cattle and land company.

O'Brien, as a representative of the Department of Justice, is sent to investigate the group's activities. Disguising himself as a foreman of a nearby ranch, the G-Man manages to gain the confidence of the gang leader, and before long is working for him. During this period he falls in love with the Senator's daughter, who suspects her brother of being duped by his associates, and because she believes O'Brien is a member of the group, he too, provokes her suspicion.

How the Border G-Man finally traps the entire ring, protects the Senator's name from any scandal, and wins the girl, provide the thrilling climax.

David Howard directed "Border G-Man," and the supporting cast includes Laraine Johnson, Ray Whitley, Rita LaRoy, as well as John Miljan, Bert Gilroy produced.

BRISTOL

Exciting action races across the screen of the Bristol Theatre, where Charles Starrett's newest punch-packed Columbia film, "West of Cheyenne," opened yesterday. The authentic western mood is heightened by atmospheric music, and particularly by the three huge numbers of the Sons of the Pioneers. All three, "Night Falls on the Prairies," "The Biscuit Blues," and "Over the Trail," should prove popular with lovers of this type of music. Mystery shrouds the story at the outset. Starrett rides into a riddle when he dismounts at Bar W Ranch. Iris Meredith, daughter of a land agent portrayed by Ed Le Saint, bars his way with a rifle. Starrett wins her confidence and learns that two former owners of the property have been mysteriously slain. He decides to stay around and join the fun. And there's plenty of fun, excitement and thrills in store for him.

Harold Lloyd, who was last seen on local screens over a year and a half ago in "The Milky Way," returns Sunday to the Bristol Theatre in his latest comedy, "Professor Beware." In this story of a down-and-out archaeologist in search of a job Lloyd has surrounded himself with an able supporting cast that includes Raymond Walburn, Lionel Stander, William Frawley, Cora Witherspoon, and his brand new leading lady, Phyllis Welch.

Hilarious hi-jinx are in order when Lloyd starts a screwy cross-country jaunt in search of a job. It seems that Lloyd, employed as an Egyptologist in a museum, loses his pants . . . and his job, in order to help a beautiful girl, Miss Welch, get a screen test.

Bristol League Given First Prize for Exhibit

The exhibits were attractively arranged and attracted much attention. The book featured in the display of Yardley Epworth League was "Quincy Adams Sawyer" (Pidgin), and the donations on the display table were articles of clothing, such as dresses, suits for small boys, underclothes, hosiery, etc. An old-time village was depicted for this old and beloved book. The houses were dimly lighted to depict the era of old-time lighting. A slag road-white had vehicles traversing it, and a pond was among the features. A train labelled "Fifth Street Mission" was shown on a track.

All articles in the numerous displays are to be given to the Fifth Street Mission, Philadelphia. "Happiness Hill" (Hill), was the book on which Emile League's project was based. A "hill" was formed of canned soups with candy men climbing the said hill.

Morrisville League based their work on "Sunnybrook Farm," depicting the farm with its broad acres. A farmhouse, barn, silo, chicken coops, pig pens, old-fashioned well, trellis with blooming plants, pasture lands, barnyards, were all included. The usual barn-yard animals, complete with a litter of pigs, were in evidence, and from a hay wagon bundles of hay were being raised by pulley to the barn loft. A piece of glass represented a stream, and in the field a farmer was to be seen ploughing. One field was surrounded by a worm fence. The donation from "Sunnybrook Farm" was a huge pile of cans of milk.

"The Royal Road to Romance" was the book on which Newtown Leaguers based their display and gifts. "Royal" desserts were used to form a pathway for a bride and groom over a stream and through a snow-covered field to their new home on a hill-side. A blue light made the white snow glisten as if by moonlight.

Langhorne League had as the basis for its display the book "The Harvest," and a fine harvest scene was shown, surrounding the farm house and barns. Real hay was to be seen leveled in the fields, corn was in the shock, and other grains in the barn. Ducks, turkeys, sheep, goats, were on the place, and in among the corn shocks were tiny rabbits. Harvest products of grain cereals were banked about the table, to be sent to the mission.

Bristol's donation was a variety of canned goods in a treasure chest, the book featured being "Treasure Island." On Treasure Island in a niche in the wall was shown a log cabin among evergreen trees. A camp fire was nearby. A small bridge crossed the stream of real water, and from the sky shown the moon and myriads of stars. From the cabin chimney real smoke poured forth.

"The Good Earth" (Buck), was chosen by Trevoze Leaguers. A typical Chinese scene in the paddy fields was represented, with the Chinese seen gathering the rice. A meagre home, with one woman working at a grain bin nearby, was included in the setting. All types of canned goods were donated by these Leaguers.

COACH HOFFMAN IS OPTIMISTIC OVER SEASON'S OUTLOOK

Will Have Six Veteran Grid Stars On Team This Year

A GOOD RESERVE LIST

Team is Now Being Given Daily Practice Workouts

MORRISVILLE, Sept. 17.—With no less than six veteran gridgers back with the squad again this season, and a number of very good reserve material from last year's team coming up, Coach John Hoffman has a right to feel a bit optimistic over his 1938 edition of the Gold-plated Bulldogs in regard to their coming campaign.

This was his view in spite of the fact the Blue and Gold outfit must face such stern opposition as Downingtown, Burlington, Princeton, Trenton, and Bristol high schools among other stellar opponents listed on the Bulldog's stiffest grid schedule ever undertaken.

At the present time the boys are being put through their daily paces and grilling at Island Park Field where they resumed their drills following a week's practice at the Summer Camp of "Camp Rest-A-While," at Salford, Pa., in the Perkiomen Valley. A squad of approximately 30 candidates made the jaunt up to camp to get into shape for the 1938 campaign, worked out daily under coaches John Hoffman and Floyd Kerr with blackboard drills scheduled in between workouts.

The trip to the camp is not only excellent for the boys in the respect that it serves to get them into shape earlier than most grid squads, but it also acts as an incentive upon them that adds to their physical power and ability.

Although the team lacks experience, Coach Hoffman is inclined to believe the 1938 team has the ability that the great 1937 outfit displayed. Moreover, the present team is slightly heavier in weight than the championship outfit of last season which should go a long way in helping them to repeat last year's victory.

Among the missing from this year's squad who made fame as a member of the crack '37 combination, are Jim Pidcock, Captain Jack Margerum, Bucky Wallace, Red Reitzle, Joe Hughes, and Cal Marsh.

Margerum showed so much ability in the Bulldog line last season that the Lower Bucks County coaches selected him as the Captain of the 1937 All-Star eleven. A replacement for him will be Coach Hoffman's greatest worry if you could call it such with the squad he has on hand. Marsh co-starred with Margerum at the other tackle berth, thus leaving both those spots open.

Both Bucky Wallace and Red Reitzle also won berths on the first team selected by the coaches last Fall. Wallace was an end while Reitzle performed at center, and these two, together with Margerum formed the nucleus of the Bulldog forward wall last season. Their shoes will be quite big ones to fill also.

The other pair of absentees from the '38 squad are backs, Jim Pidcock, another member of the 1937 All-Star team, and Joe Hughes. Pidcock, of course, was a varsity ball totter and one of the best in the entire conference, having finished up second in his teamate, Jim Yeager, for the individual scoring honors last year. Hughes was an alternate substitute and starter with Andy Gavin. A trio of other backs who were substitutes last year and who graduated are Johnny Toth, Red Beetle, and Bill Hohwieler.

Listed among the most promising candidates to fill these vacant spots in the Bulldog line-up this season are Jesse Huggins and El McClune at the left flank which spot Wallace held down. Both are six-foot, 180 pounders but are lacking in experience as this is their first season at the grid game and both are Seniors.

The tackle spots left open by Margerum and Marsh seem destined to go to Earl Wood and either Ed Harrison or Jack Boudoux. The former shows so much promise, it seems certain he will get the call for one of the spots while the latter two are battling on par for the other position.

Joe Haley, a big 200 pounder who served in the role of a substitute lineman last year, looks like the goods to take the place of Red Reitzle to fill in the center hole. Others who are putting up a kick about who shall take the job are Charlie Perrine and Bill Gentry.

The rest of the line is well fortified with a pair of experienced boys back at the guard posts. They are Bill Wilson and Frankie Mattis, both of whom performed nobly for the Bulldogs last year. Walt Hulise, Ralph Contruso, Joe Beetle, and Bob Gorski will serve as understudies to Wilson and Mattis. Contruso is a newcomer from Edgewood, N. J.

Albie Johnson, who will again hold down the right wing spot, is the only other veteran lineman to return to the squad this season. He, and the other pair fighting for the left end post, will have Bob Keys, Mike Kish, and Fred McGowan to substitute for them.

Others who are battling for a berth on the starting team in the line are Bill Wufford, Ted Krysa and Gord Cox, all of whom are seeking one of the two open spots at the tackle posts.

In the backfield, Hoffman has little to worry him. For here he has returning to the team his ace back, Jim Yeager, signal caller, punter, passer and speedy runner, who carried off the All-Star scoring honors in the Lower Bucks circuit last Fall. His performance for the Bulldogs won him a place on the first all-star eleven for 1937 also. He will carry the brunt of the Blue and Gold offensive attack once again this season.

Art Baehr, ace blocking back of the '37 squad, will again perform in that capacity this year at his fullback post while Andy Gavin, a first string substitute last season, will try to fill Jim Pidcock's shoes as Jim Yeager's running mate. And to date he seems to be quite capably doing just that. Bill Talone seems to have clinched the other backfield berth in the fight with Bill Provost, Bob Pursell, Red Thorn, Allan White and Lee Okurowski.

SPORT FANS TO SHOW AID INJURED PLAYER

George Dougherty, captain of the Landreth baseball team, had the misfortune recently to suffer an injury to his eye, so serious that perhaps its full extent has not as yet been definitely determined.

The immediate result has been to bring to a close temporarily only, it is hoped, all baseball activities on Dougherty's part. Due to his disability there has been enforced rest on his part.

The benefit game which is to be played at Landreth ball park tomorrow afternoon will afford all his friends an opportunity to show their appreciation of Dougherty. Appreciation for the many years during which he played twilight baseball in the local league without compensation; appreciation of the many thrills he gave all baseball fans who had numerous opportunities to see him play the "hot corner" as it should be played; appreciation of the sportsmanlike way in which he has always conducted himself on the field; appreciation of his fighting spirit and the many afternoons and evenings which he has given to the sport lovers of Bristol, which otherwise might have been drab and uneventful.

All friends of baseball in this area are urged to attend the game tomorrow and make this affair a real outpouring of appreciation on the part of fans of the great national pastime. It is an opportunity for all baseball lovers to lend Dougherty a helping hand and to let him know beyond any doubt that they appreciate him as a player, friend and general all-around lover and participant in a good clean sport.

The Philadelphia Police will have Young on the mound with Curry behind the plate. This is the same battery as appeared in two games already played between the Philadelphia Police and Landreth's Seeds. Al Carey will be on the mound for the Farmers with Bill Harvi under the bat. The baseball fans who saw either one or both of the two previous games between these clubs know how closely matched these teams are, and, therefore, this the rubber game on Sunday should be an exciting contest all the way.

This is the last game on the schedule for 1938.

RED TEAM UPSETS GRAY AND WINS, SCORE, 6-0

After battling evenly for over three periods to a scoreless deadlock, the Red team broke the ice and cashed in on a sensational pass to push over a lone touchdown on the Gray outfit and thereby upset the latter eleven, 6-0, in the squad's annual Red and Gray game on the local high school field yesterday afternoon before a goodly sized crowd, who turned out to witness the yearly squad feud settled.

The Red team, which was composed of the tentative varsity linemen, and the second string backs, gained possession of the ball early in the fourth period via a Gray kick, and then proceeded on their march into touchdown. With the pigskin resting on the Gray 45 yard line, the Red team continued their air bombardment against the Gray defense. Morris "Boake" Carter faked back to his own 45 yard stripe and hurled a 35 yard pass out to the right where Steve Florito, Red left end, cut over and snared the oval in his flight, and then with a quick toss, he passed it out to Wilbur Van Lenten who trailed the play and the latter scampered the last 20 yards or so over into the Gray end zone with the only touchdown of the game. The extra point, via a line buck, failed.

However, in due credit to the Gray team, they had their substitute team on the field against the varsity Red outfit at the time of the six-pointer was scored. The Gray team was composed of the potential varsity backs and second team line.

"Both teams played good ball on both the offense and the defense and battled evenly all the way through," coach Juenger stated after the game.

And although they need plenty of polishing in spots, he nevertheless, felt pleased with both squads' playing. Coach Juenger was especially pleased by the work of Tony D'Angelo, a newcomer to the squad this year. Tony played wingback on the winning combination, and looked very good on both the defense as well as offense. He intercepted many passes on defense, ran well on the offense, and in general he cavorted at his halfback post very capably.

Another pair of backs, who starred for their respective teams were Morris Carter and Danny DiMido. Both played in the fullback role, and not only backed up the line on defense well, but they also did most of the running, punting, and passing for their team—and that too, they performed in fine style for so early in the season. Jim Orazi and Vincent Profy, halfbacks on the Gray team, also starred for that outfit. Profy ran hard and tackled viciously, while Orazi performed in his old style of fine playing especially in receiving passes.

On the line, it was Wilbur Van Lenten, Captain Joe Ciaella, and John Cordas for the Red team and Joe Pica, who played a fine game at end, starred for the Gray eleven.

Florito	Waltz
